

BEL-REA INSTITUTE CE WEBINAR

Evening the Playing Field with Understanding

In most businesses there are levels or hierarchies that most often equate to job descriptions or titles. Veterinary medicine is no different, but with the advent of corporate structures and expanding needs of the private practice the definitions of veterinarian, veterinary technician, and receptionist have gotten more garbled with additional or specific duties. This can cause undue stress in the workplace from leadership down expecting their duties are fully understood by everyone else at the practice; everyone should understand' the stresses each are facing. Really? Are fellow employees supposed to automatically know this information by perception?
